SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

RADIO FREE EUROPE/RADIO LIBERTY, INC. CORPORATE RECORDS

GENERAL INFORMATION

The complexity of this collection for the researcher as well as the archivist is manifold. The most salient fact characterizing this collection is its sheer volume, which necessitated its breakdown into two collections: the corporate records, consisting of the organizational and administrative documentation of RFE/RL, its supervisory, subordinate, and affiliate organizations, and the broadcast archive, consisting of tapes of broadcasts, scripts and associated documentation.

Each of these units therefore has its own register, in turn broken down into series. This register describes the corporate records only.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS PHOTOGRAPHIC FILE

In searching the Public Affairs files for photographs of specific individuals, it is necessary to know that employees might be listed under various sections: they might be found directly in the "Employees" section in alphabetical order, or they might be found listed under the department in which they worked. At all events, the "General" folders should be checked because far from all photographs had names attached or written on the back. It is also worth restating the obvious, that the terms "includes" and "depicted" do not mean "limited to." While an effort has been made to list all identifiable personalities in a photograph where appropriate, in some cases this proved unmanageable, such as in mass group photographs, or when identifications were unavailable, unreliable or submitted post factum. If there is a good head shot of a person in one section, he or she will not necessarily be listed by name in other sections, such as when appearing in a group. In most cases, group photos, or even of two people, were put under the "general" category closest or most appropriate to the essence of the subject area, unless it was obvious that one of the figures depicted was the central subject of the photograph (e.g., in the case of visitors, where it was clear that one visitor was the central figure and others depicted were either employees or camp followers, the photograph was entered under the visitor's name, rather than as a group). In this case an effort was made to list the other identifiable people in the photo as well, especially if there are no other equally good or better photographs of them available elsewhere in the collection. This is particularly the case for interviews with celebrities or visitors, where the visitor's (or group's) name is the main entry, and the interviewer may or may not be listed. This purely subjective system was put into practice to avoid listing people whose only visible body part was the back of their head. Similarly, depictions of sporting events, awards ceremonies, and other staff activities may be found either under the name of the person receiving the award, or in a "general" category if there is a group involved. As a general rule, one or more members of management were present at such awards ceremonies and other events, but are not always listed, as good direct photos of them are easily found under their own names.

Negatives were kept together with corresponding prints because they were originally provided in this fashion. Where they were kept separate, especially where strips of negatives depicted numerous and various subjects, the negatives can usually be found in the closest "general" folder, or in other folders if, for example, the corresponding print in question was originally part of a series located in one of the series folders. It should also not be assumed that each print has a corresponding negative.

Another peculiarity of this series is that it contains some associated non-photographic documents: biographical notes, clippings, correspondence, transcripts of broadcasts, and other materials relating to the photographs.

In searching by name, several points should be kept in mind: where provided (and unless dictated otherwise by the Library of Congress), full names (Eugene, rather than Gene) have been used, including initials where indicated. Absolute uniformity, however, proved impossible to achieve, in some cases due to misspellings or conflicting spellings, different methods of indicating or ignoring diacritics, or transliteration according to various systems (English, German, pidgin). Unless a specific latinized form of a name is used throughout, we have used either the prevalent form found in the documents, or, if no such form is indicated, we have used the Library of Congress system of transliteration. Name searches, therefore, should be conducted with a view to possible variations in spelling. An appendix to this register indicates the standard forms of personal names used, along with their most common variants.

Not all the photographs in the RFE/RL records belonged to the Public affairs department. For this reason, there is a separate PHOTOGRAPHS file, and oversize photographs have been delegated to the OVERSIZE FILE--Public affairs photographic file. The guidelines expressed above for the PUBLIC AFFAIRS PHOTOGRAPHIC FILE apply in all cases.
